Bijou eighteenth-century palace, once graced by some of northern Spain's most illustrious families, is presented in impeccable condition and ready for the next chapter in its compelling story. The beauty of the house itself is complemented by an enchanting period country estate where one can marvel at the spectacular gardens, fountains, stabling and private chapel.

This bijou eighteenth-century Asturian palace, once graced by some of northern Spain's most illustrious families, is ready for the next chapter in its compelling story

This magnificent home is built on a square footprint around an internal cloister, a vision of grace and symmetry with a stunning glazed gallery on the upper level that gives access to the main living accommodation, set over two floors and an attic space. Extending 400 m², the house boasts eight bedrooms, five bathrooms, a dining room with large stone fireplace and built-in library, a resplendent living room, office and cellar.

At every glance, we are treated to charming details and flourishes of fine craftsmanship, from the magnificent carved wood exterior door to splendid stone archways. Adjoining the house is a private chapel, which can be accessed from the house via an internal door.

The palace occupies a commanding position within its 40,000 m² estate, which, as well as sunny gardens and several soothing fountains, still holds the remnants of everything a fine country family could require: a granary, stabling, its very own wine press... More modern needs are taken care of, too: this is no draughty castle, but a contemporary home with all mod cons, full central heating and recently upgraded electrics. Alternatively, it would make a splendid venue for weddings and other events.
